ANOTHER IMPORTANT ARCHEOLOGICAL DIS-COVERY.-The Department of State is in receipt of a dispatch from General John Meredith Mead, the charge d' affairs at Athens, reporting the discovery by M. Stephen Commanverdis, the learned Secretary of the Archemological Society of Athens, of the monument mentioned by of Athens, of the monument mentioned by Thucydides as having been erected by Peisistratus, son of Hippias, and grandson of the tryant Peisistratus. The stone, which was lying neglected on the right bank of the Ilissus, southwest of the Temple of Inpiter Olympia bears, an inscription, of which the following is the translation:—"This monument, upon his advent to power Paisistratus, the age, of Hippias, has to power, Poisistratus, the son of Hippias, has dedicated in the temple of Apollo Pythius." It is worthy of note that the letters which Thucydides memtions are obscure, are indeed roughly and feebly cut, and that, as in all the Attic inscriptions before the time of Eucleide, instead of H, there is E, and instead of the diphthong OY there is the simple O, and Y, instead of YI. The discovery of this remarkable stone fixes the site of the Temple of Appollo Pythius, which was hitherto unknown. The monument has been purchased by the Archeological Society, and will be immediately transferred to the Museum of Varvakion.
